

ANGUS O. CAMPBELL, SANGERVILLE.

THE Scotchman musing on the Scotsman's name
 In "Angus," finds an echoing syllable of "hame."
 He scents the heather-bloom that Davy Balfour trod
 And sees the lowlands sweeping to the ocean broad,
 Add "Campbell" to the name! And full and sweet
 It rounds itself to Scotian melody complete.

This Campbell lives to-day in Sangerville,
 And fashions woolens in a modern mill.
 To ways of industry and the constructive arts
 He adds the talents of a man of parts;
 And finds the time in interludes sedate
 To serve his district as a counsellor of state;
 And faithful to his trust, has thus expressed
 The purpose of a man who does his best.
